

Public Declaration of Religion and Protected Right

I, a man called by the name DAMION ROBERTS and alias Rasta, by my voice and the breath of life, do hereby solemnly declare and affirm my religion, my holy law, and my right to full protection under all sources of religious liberty recognized in law and natural right.

My holy book and governing law is the Old Testament, with special emphasis on the first five books of Moses (Torah). These writings are the foundation of my faith, worship, and way of life.

I identify as part of the ancient and continuing community known as the Hebrews, Israelites, and Jewish people, whose roots trace to the Land of Israel and the Kingdom of Judah. This identity encompasses both spiritual devotion and historical heritage. My faith and practice are expressed through adherence to the laws and teachings therein.

My home is my synagogue, and wherever I rest my head becomes my place of worship. I affirm that my spiritual practice is not confined to a building, but lives in my household, my conduct, and my devotion to the Almighty.

Declaration of Right

By this notice, I invoke and accept all protections guaranteed under:

1. The Jamaica (Constitution) Order in Council 1962, Sections 13–24 on fundamental rights and freedoms,
2. The Universal Declaration of Human Rights, Article 18 (freedom of thought, conscience, and religion),
3. All other recognized instruments securing liberty of religion and conscience.

Call to Awareness

Any attempt to infringe upon, restrict, or compel me against my declared faith and practice is null, void, and repugnant to the supreme law, and subject to a five million Jamaican dollar fine or the equivalent.¹
